Just one year ago there marched through our streets as noble and splendid a body of men as ever went forth to battle. They were about nine hundred strong. The men were in the vigor of youthful manhood, and as, in perfect order and with military precision, they paraded through our city, the admiration of the gallant array. This was the first Tennessee regiment, under the heroic veteran Col. Campbell. They left our city, fresh from their own happy homes in the mountains and by the river-sides in healthful Tennessee, full of hope, ambition and patriotism; they departed in cheerful spirits, and with impatient ardor, for the scene of war. Arrived in the hostile country, they were soon involved in all the sufferings, deprivations, ennui, and sickness, incident to camp life. Disease made fearful havoc in their ranks. Scores returned to their homes, broken down in health and spirits, ere they had seen a hostile face. When the dullness and misery of camp life were changed into the stir and excitement of the march and the battle-field, this regiment was the foremost in the storm, and the first in the havoc and destruction which the enemy poured into our ranks in the bloody charge at Monterey. One-third of them lay gasping in death, or under severe wounds, on the plains. But those who were left were undismayed, and nobly sustained their ground amid the iron tempest hurled upon them from the enemy's covered works. They came not to be conquered; die they might, and would if it were the alternative to a surrender, but to give way or yield to an enemy, whom they had travelled two thousand miles to conquer, never entered their minds or hearts. Monterey yielded to the irresistible valor of such men. Then ensued a long camp life, more dreadful to the soldier than the bloodiest battles. Then came long toilsome marches, terminating in no glo- first of July. rious or animating results. Then they embarked in Scott's proud army, for the grand affair at Vera Cruz. Next we find them in the charge on the formidable batteries of the enemy at Cerro | For Latin, Greek, French, Spanish, and Gordo. Again they join their hurras with those of our whole army over the triumph of our arms. But their service approaches a close. Having faithfully served their country, they desire to give way to others, and return to the bosoms of their families, where anxions hearts have so long pined their perilous On Friday last, the whole of this gallant

WAR.

We understand that this able and sagacious officer expresses the opinion that the prospect of peace in Mexico is more remote now than it was after the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca. The Mexicans think that it will be impossible for us to hold the country long, on account of the immense expense to which our government will be subjected, and also from the expectation that the divisions of parties and differences of opinion among our people will eventually cause the withdrawal of our armies from the country.

Gen. Patterson thinks that we ought not to look for or solicit a peace, but should proceed in the most prompt and vigorous manner to conquer and occupy the whole of Mexico .-When we have done this, a government should be organized, officers appointed throughout disease is rapidly progressing in New York. On Thursday last, nearly 100 patients, had been sent from the Alms House alone to the Bellevue Hospital. Cases of it are to be found in every ward of the city, and many valuable citizens have already fallen victims to the infection.
